Nora Znotinas Improving My Photography One Trip at a Time

Traveling allows me to concentrate on photography. I take photos to remember a moment in time, to capture an experience, to capture a feeling ... preferably in focus and without blown highlights. Images will be from recent trips which include Bhutan, Japan, and Svalbard. Some of these were photography tours with professional photographers and some were not. I hope to show the essence of the location, the impact of trip logistics on the photographs, and the role of gear.

Stefan A. Rose Twin Cities: artistic documentation of the urban landscape

Twin Cities is an ongoing long-term view of the dramatic changes to the Kitchener-Waterloo urban landscape as industry departs the inner core and century homes fall under the wrecking ball, and high-tech workers’ condominiums replace them.

Stefan A. Rose uses an ultra-large-format 8- x 20-inch panoramic view camera because the large film’s extreme detail and smooth tonal gradations offer a sensuous expansive visual experience. Rose will discuss the techniques, motivations, and considerations of his black-and-white photographic work, informed by his interest in vernacular architecture, constructed identity, and the shaping of rural and urban environments.
